Modern Slavery is where someone's freedom is taken away in order to exploit or take advantage of them. Examples include:

- Sexual exploitation, where someone is forced to have sex with people, maybe in return for gifts or money.
- Forced labour, where someone is made to work, often for little or no pay. Jobs or places of work could include construction, nail bars or car washes – but not only these.
- Domestic servitude, where someone is forced to perform household or childcare duties for little or no pay.
- Criminal exploitation, where someone is forced into criminal activity such as working in cannabis factories.

Modern slavery affects men, women, girls and boys of all ages, backgrounds and nationalities. Criminals can use threats, violence or deception to trap victims into slavery. Even if someone is being paid, it can still be exploitation.

Know the signs. There are a number of signs that could indicate exploitation:

- Physical or psychological abuse, including neglect or lack of food. Appearing anxious, withdrawn, submissive or avoiding eye contact.
- Living and working in poor conditions, such as dirty, unsafe or overcrowded locations. Maybe they are paid little or nothing or work too many hours.
- They appear isolated or controlled by others. Their movement or activities are restricted by someone; maybe that person speaks for them too. Their passport or other documents may be missing or controlled by their 'employer'.
- Other signs include: reluctance to seek help, fear of authorities or deportation, in debt to someone, or lack of knowledge about their whereabouts.

What you should do:

- If you believe someone is being exploited or the victim of criminal activity, you can report your suspicions to police by calling 101 or via the website www.herts.police.uk.
- Or if you prefer, you can report your concerns to the independent, charity-run 24/7 Modern Slavery Helpline on 08000 121 700. Victims can also call this number for help and confidential support in over 200 languages.
- Always call 999 if someone is in immediate danger.

By reporting your concerns, you will be enabling police to investigate and potentially free someone from exploitation and abuse.
